Albania – October 12, 1951 (OSA)

A Swedish journalist who visited Albania in September observes that the USSR is trying to make Albania a “model Mohammedan-Communist state” to influence the Muslim world and the Middle East. Catholics are attacked, Orthodox ignored, Muslims supported. A 1942 Italian survey found Albania's population 10% Catholic, 20% Orthodox, and 70% Muslim. However, Catholics' loyalty to the Vatican, not their minority, is the major reason for their persecution, save the few who have joined the "National Catholic Church." The Orthodox Church is untouched due to its independence from Constantinople (declared in 1923, reconfirmed in 1937) and government members' "Orthodox background." Hoxha, a Muslim, fits well into the Soviet scheme. But the scheme is superstitious, not logical, utilizing Roufai dervishes' tortuous practices. The Bektashi Order, 100,000 strong, is openly tolerated and used as a vehicle for USSR propaganda to the Muslim world, whilst its property is intact. The USSR is trying to use a new Tirana radio station to propagandize the tolerance of Bekashis.

Although the soldiers have on-the-spot freedom, they are subject to the Soviet mission in Tirana. Allegedly, Mehmet Shehu, the “Soviet stooge” in Albania’s government, is angered by Bulgarian involvement. Deportations take place in four different cities of Czechoslovakia – Prague, Bratislava, Liberec, and Brno. Deported people do not have to do any forced labor, they are just left on their own.

There are speculations about the purpose of deportations:

1. To provide more workers with housing
2. Psychological – to make the workers believe that some things are done to improve their living standards
3. Terror
4. Scatter prospective opposition

Some specific groups are chosen for deportation, which are:

1. Those with relatives living in the west
2. People who paid “millionaires tax” after 1948
3. Those who in the past have worked for western firms.

People deported from Prague are taken to the Silesian border, and others who are deported from Bratislava are sent to the eastern region of Slovakia.

A source from Trieste, citing Communist authorities, alleges that 107,000 Albanians have been killed or interned in labor camps since 1944 (more than 10% of the population). Many forced laborers work for 12 hours a day, suffer “slow starvation” and experience epidemics, and die following torture. However, allegedly, most deaths in camps are due to “mass murder, or genocide.” Albanian Communist torture methods are said to be worse than the Chinese or Mongols’ worst.

Villages are razed (resembling the 1942 Lidice massacre) due to tenuous rumors, and the captain of the Albanian secret police brags of executing 203 “traitors” without trial. The most notorious camp is near Lake Maliq. The army and government are in conflict resulting in Mehmet Shehu, Minister of the Interior, creating an arm of 12,000 against 30,000 regular forces. His better-equipped forces are often deployed against the army. Although most camps are already known, other details are unconfirmed.

This medical system is very flawed, as transferring doctors several times a year in different medical centers makes it impossible for them to acquire decent knowledge about their cases. Another issue is that Czechoslovakia cannot import any medication from the US, France, Germany, or Switzerland, and after the nationalization of the pharmaceutical industry the production levels of Czechoslovakia tremendously decrease, hence it does not meet the needs of the Czech people.

The university was founded by the Swedish king Gustabus in 1632. However, Soviet historians changed the foundation date to 1802 - the year when Alexander I of Russia granted Tartu the right to resume its activities, which had ceased during a number of war years. The date was presumably changed because Soviet historians do not want to admit that Tartu university was founded by a Westerner, and that it is also older than any Russian university.

There are different reactions from the East-German population to the tentative acceptance of West-German Chancellor Adenauer's 14 points as the basis for future negotiations on the unification of all Germany. Workers and peasants are either hopeful about the change or complain less about the working conditions or long queues since "it will not last long anyway." They get bolder criticizing the regime more openly, while middle-class people and the intelligentsia are more skeptical about the change, considering it a Soviet trick. The most indoctrinated Communists trust their leaders, while rank-and-file members are confused and often panic. Some indications show that the second category is probably the nearest to the truth. Unusually, many secret meetings are taking place with only a few Communist officials, and according to an informant from People's Police certain plans are prepared for People's Police to go underground and emerge as an organized force, to probably take over all Germany.

The polite address “Ön” is no longer favored in workplaces. Formerly rich women may have to perform menial jobs.

Albania / Romania / Poland / Vatican City – November 6, 1952 (OSA)

A source in Rome alleges that regulations regarding elections in Albania, Romania, and Poland issued by the Vatican State Secretariat order Catholics to abstain from voting, except if facing death or retribution on others. Catholics are purportedly forbidden to make pro-Communist propaganda or campaign against electoral absenteeism. However, the application of this to Poland is said to be “false.” Few Vatican-following Catholics in Romania are said to be in any position to vote or campaign, whilst the head of the Albanian Catholic Church is directly sponsored and directed by the government, making the application of the regulations unfeasible.

Tension between East Germany and Poland is seemingly increasing in connection with the Soviet-sponsored Polish-East-German “repatriation” agreement concerning Silesian expellees. The East-German Government opposes the idea of sending more skilled German workers to Poland. Polish authorities, also opposing the industrial pooling and labor exchange scheme, release statistical figures to demonstrate that it would be difficult to accommodate “repatriable” workers due to overpopulation and lack of housing. The Soviet authorities, despite the resistance from Poland and East Germany, are still pushing forward the Silesian German worker scheme.

Soviet merchant ships from Odessa stop at the port of Genoa, unloading steel, iron, grain, and newsprint. The captain of the Soviet ship allows his sailors to go ashore. The Soviet sailors in Genoa are given part of their salary in Italian currency, but it is not enough to purchase many goods in Genoa. The first thing the sailors buy is a suitcase, because in the USSR it is impossible to buy one at any time, only when there is a distribution, and that happens rarely. A suitcase is the only useful item in life for Soviet people, it can fit all their belongings when they have to move from one apartment to another. Besides suitcases, the seamen purchase watches, fountain pens, shoes, etc., all the articles which are not available in Soviet stores. Surprisingly, the officers of the Soviet Union are paid more than those of the Western countries, and the difference between the sailors' pay and that of the officers is greater on Soviet ships than for example on American or Italian vessels.

In Kazakhstan, the blow strikes the intellectuals, but similar purges are probably carried out in other Soviet provinces.

According to a former Soviet railroad worker, the Soviet railroad system is the weakest link in the Soviet economy. The German locomotives taken during and after the war do not do away with the shortage of rolling stock, because these cars have only limited use in the USSR, as there is a 9-cm difference in Soviet and German gauges. The German cars, therefore, are only used on short industrial lines in the Urals between the factories and the railroad stations. As a result, the Soviet factories are often without coal or raw materials, because of the delay in rail transportations. It is worse for passenger trains. Regular citizens often need to wait more than a week before they can buy a ticket. Moreover, there are bans on traveling to certain cities. For instance, a regular citizen can't go to the capital cities of the 16 Soviet republics, or the 4 “heroic” cities of Leningrad, Stalingrad, Odessa, and Sevastopol without special permission. Traveling from Leningrad to Estonia is also forbidden.
